Move Is Called Blow to Aquino , Case Prosecution

> By Steve Lohr. New York Times Service .

MANILA — The court presid-102, igno S. Aquino Jr. threw out Thursday self-incriminating testimony given by Fabian C. Ver, the former armed forces chief of staff, and seven other soldiers charged in a YEV plot to assassinate the opposition

The decision is considered highly to the prosecution's case against the eight, all of whom were charged as accessories in Mr.

Agamo's killing.
One of the three presiding judges, Angusto Amores, said the ruling was "definitely" a blow to the prosecution. Asked if it was a fatal blow to the case against the accessories, Judge Amores replied, "I think so."

General Ver's lawyer, Antonio Coronel, said he now planned to file a motion to dismiss the charges against his client. The defense presentation in the trial is scheduled to begin next week, but, Mr. Coronel said, "You don't defend yourself against nothing."

The inadmissible testimony was given by the eight men before a citizens fact-finding board that concluded in October that Mr. Aquino was killed in a military conspiracy. The board report formed the basis of the prosecution case in the trial.

The court decision came in response to a defense motion asking that the testimony of the accessories be declared inadmissible be-Wife cause of the constitutional protection against self-incrimination.

Mr. Aquino was shot to death at the Manila International Airport on Aug. 21, 1983, when he returned to his homeland after three years of yelf-imposed exile in the United States. The military claimed that the opposition leader was killed by a lone gunman, Rolando Galman, who had been hired by Commu-

It Endorses Bid Of $793 Million From Texas Air

WASHINGTON - Trans World Airlines Inc. agreed Thursday to be taken over by Texas Air Corp. for $793.5 million in a merg-er that would create the United States' second-largest airline.

TWA, a major force in trans-Atlantic service, had been seeking a friendly buyer for the past month to block a bid by Carl C. Icahn, a New York financier. Mr. Icahn's investment group bought 11.2 million shares, or 32.8 percent of TWA's stock, and offered $18 for each of the remaining shares.

Under the merger agreement, TWA stockholders will receive $19 in cash and $4 in a new issue of 14.5-percent cumulative nonconvertible preferred stock of TWA. It would be operated as an independent subsidiary of Texas Air and would retain its present management and name, the two companies

The merger is subject to approval of TWA shareholders, completion of financing and government approvals.

The acquisition would be another coup for Frank Lorenzo, chairman of Texas Air, who has taken advantage of deregulation to build an airline empire that already includes Continental Airlines and New York Air.

The combination of TWA. Continental Airlines and New York Air would rank by most measures as the nation's second-largest airline, behind United Airlines and slightly larger than American Airlines. Together, the three carriers would have nearly 300 aircraft and 40,000 employees. Combined revenues would be $5 billion annually. By adding TWA, Texas Air would fill many of the gaps be-tween New York Air's primarily East Coast operations and Continental's coverage of the West, since TWA's primary domestic hub is in

Coalition's Poll Ratings Drop as Jobless Rate Hovers at 9%

By Warren Getler International Herald Tribune BONN — Unemployment has become a serious political liability for Chancellor Helmut Kohl's coalition government.
The West German jobless rate

U.S., in Shift, To Offer India Modern Arms

By Michael Weisskopf and Don Oberdorfer Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration, in a major policy shift, has decided to offer advanced military technology and weaponry to India but Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi said Thursday it would take his country time to build confidence in the United States as an arms supplier.

The policy change would end a 20-year hiatus in large-scale U.S. arms sales to India. The United States cut off most arms purchases by India in 1965 at the outbreak of the India-Pakistan war.

The new U.S. policy, which would be conditional on Indian acceptance of strict safeguards, became known as President Ronald Reagan and Mr. Gandhi, held a "get-acquainted meeting" at the White House Wednesday under very heavy security.

Pentagon officials said the administration decision to supply ad-vanced military technology and weaponry goes beyond an agreement on the supply of civilian tech-nology signed last month. Most of the weapons that India imports are obtained from the Soviet Union.

[Although the United States said it was willing to sell modern weap-ons to India, the State Department spokesman, Bernard Kaib, said that weapons sales were not a "central issue" during the Indian lead-er's talks, United Press International reported from Washington. [At an embassy reception for reporters, Mr. Gandhi remarked that India did not have sufficient confidence in the United States as an arms supplier. He said that Washington could change its conditions retroactively, and added that there was no certainty on spare parts. It would take time to establish confidence, he said.]

Between the shoreline and the first of the concrete supports for the bridge is a tangled mass of rusted steel. On shore, workmen are busy clearing it away for scrap.

As a result of Mr. Weinberger's intervention, the sources said, Mr. Shultz was instructed to call Hussein and ask whether the king wanted the administration to proceed now with the arms sale plan. Hussein reportedly agreed that it would be better to wait and said that, for now, he would regard a request for economic aid as a sufficient gesture of U.S. backing.

FBI Says Spy Suspect Was Recruited, Then Took Classified Job

By Ben A. Franklin

New York Times Service NORFOLK, Virginia — Arthur Walker was recruited as a spy for the Soviet Union in early 1980, a month before he found a job in Norfolk with a private navy contracting concern from which he has admitted taking classified docu-ments, a federal agent has testified.

The agent, Beverly Andress of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, said Wednesday that Mr. Walker, who retired from the navy in 1973 as a lieutenant commander, was recruited for espionage by his younger brother, John A. Walker Jr., a retired navy communications

Both men, along with John Walker's son Michael, a Navy yeo-man, and Jerry A. Whitworth, a retired navy radioman on the West Coast, have been charged with espionage.

Miss Andress testified at a pro-liminary hearing in federal district court in which Arthur Walker, 50, was denied bail. The agent said her testimony was based on a confes-sion that Arthur Walker made to her on May 24, four days before his

Weinberger Backs Execution of Spies New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger has proposed that a way should be found to execute people who passed ilitary secrets to hostile powers in peacetime.

Mr. Weinberger said Wednesday that a committee had been formed to study whether U.S. military law should allow such executions. A change would not affect the cases of John A. Walker Jr. and three associates, who are to be tried in federal, not military, courts.

[Senator Ted Stevens, Republican of Alaska, introduced legislation
Thursday to make spying punishable by death, United Press International reported from Washington.]

Navy Secretary John F. Lehman Jr. said this week that the death penalty should be imposed on those convicted of spy charges.

Mr. Weinberger said, "I like to think that perhaps I induced that

When asked what I thought should be done if the people were guilty, I said I thought they should be shot, though I supposed hanging is the preferred method," he said.

U.S. Army Fears It Suffered From Navy Espionage Ring

The army team is working with the navy's, which has been listing what secrets the alleged espionage ring was in position to give the Soviet Union. This effort comes at a time when some U.S. officials are warning that the damage to national security from the ring may extend to intelligence activities as well as the operations of the military. The prime area of concern, officials said, is what the Soviet Union learned from intercepting messages and breaking through the codes, because of the information allegedly supplied by the ring. John A. Walker Jr. and three other present and former navy men are alleged to have been the members of the ring.

Admiral James D. Watkins, the chief of naval operations, said Tuesday that the biggest loss to the navy was in communications. He said the navy "assumes" that the Soviet Union broke the codes designed to scramble messages trans-mitted throughout the fleet by teletype and telephone.

He said the navy was changing its secret communications gear on an "accelerated basis."

Navy officials said Mr. Walker's most sensitive jobs, which gave him access to coding equipment, were at the navy crypto repair school in Vallejo, California, in 1963 and as a radioman cleared for top-secret powered missile-carrying rines from 1962 to 1967.

Admiral Watkins said the navy's most vulnerable period was from 1962 to 1969, when Mr. Walker was in a position to pass tightly guarded secrets about military communications gear and submarine equipment to the Russians.

When Mr. Walker retired in 1976, he was a communications systems officer in the headquarters of the Atlantic submarine fleet in Norfolk, Virginia. Also charged in the case are his brother Arthur, a etired navy lieutenant commander; his son Michael, a veoman aboard the nuclear carrier Nimitz and a longtime friend, Jerry A. Whitworth, a retired navy radio-

Admiral Watkins said he be heved that the navy would replace coding equipment as part of the steps taken to minimize damage Intelligence sources said that, although the coding equipment of which Mr. Walker had detailed knowledge is decades old, its components and operating characteristics could help the Soviet Union penetrate current communications security.

Two former top U.S. intelligence officials disagreed in estimating the potential loss from compror

One said the presumed damage could have extended throughout the government, including top-secret intelligence channels. He said military services and government agencies used similar equipment to code and decode their message

The other former official said the coding equipment was constantly modified to prevent compromise. He said that reconstructing the machinery would not enable the Russians to break the codes.

Finns Held by Lebanese Militia Say Israelis Watch Over Them

By Thomas L. Friedman

New York Times Service
MARJAYOUN, Lebanon —
The Israeli Army has taken foreign reporters for a visit to 21 Finnish soldiers of the United Nations who are being held hostage near here by an Israeli-supported militia.

The hostages, looking fit but tired Wednesday, are being held about two miles (three kilometers) north of the Israeli border in an old house with green window frames and an orange balcony. The house is next to the headquarters of the Christian-led militia, the South ebanon Army, on the outskirts of Marjayoun.

The militia was armed by the Israelis to police the so-called security zone in southern Lebanon that Israel has created along its northern frontier.

"The treatment has been not bad, not good," said one of the Finns, Sergeant Kari Vesa, 24. "The Israelis are always around to waich over us."

The Finns said that at least two Israeli soldiers were on the scene of their confinement at all times — cape, General Lahad said they not to guard them but to ensure would be "shot at."

was no north, no east and no west - just the 11 apostles," said Paul J.F. Lusaka, president of the General Assembly, as he surveyed the scene with satisfaction. Mr. Lusaka, a Zambian, was referring to a conference that that was unparalleled in UN histobrought together the present and former General Assembly presidents for the first time in United Nations history.

For a two-day meeting that ended Monday, he and 10 of his predecessors talked about old times and plotted strategy on how to make the much-maligned forum work

At the end of their sessions they reached what is becoming a familiar conclusion as the world organization approaches its 40th anniversary on Oct. 24. Despite its shortcomings, they decided, the General Assembly "has become a true mirror of the world," giving nations a necessary forum to speak

The presidents recommended leaving the UN Charter unchanged, but called for the organizing of assembly sessions so that heads of state could hold summit meetings on specific subjects during the general debate.

They suggested that the assem-bly's general debate concentrate on one or two broad global issues, such as preventing nuclear war, disarmament, north-south cooperation, world debt, famine, the environment, population control or ways to improve the functioning of the United Nations. Twenty-three of the 39 presidents are still alive, but some were unable to attend because of ill health and others because of commitments. Four did not reply to the invitation.

Participants said that the confer-ence, which was attended by three West Europeans, three East Europeans, one Latin American, two Arabs and two Africans, was marked by elements distinctly lacking at General Assembly sessions: short, closed meetings, an absence of tension and a warm, familial atmosphere.

In the hall outside a basement conference room, a former Italian prime minister, Amintore Fanfani, embraced a former Algerian for-eign minister. Abdelaziz Boute-llika.

During their one-year terms, these diplomats steered the Gener-al Assembly through some of its stormier debates, and some of their decisions still reverberate through the General Assembly hall. For Mr. Bouteflika the year was 1974-75. His memories included a decision that South Africa could not take part in any subsequent assembly proceedings (a ruling still in force), the assembly's appeal for a new international economic order and a visit by Yasser Arafat. Mr. Fanfani, who presided over the 20th anniversary of the United Nations in 1965, said that many of the criticisms of the assembly had not changed in the last 20 years. "So we're celebrating the 40th anniversary not with champagne but with the identification of ways to make the UN even more effective,"

Polish Plan Would Curb Academic Freedoms

By Michael T. Kaufman New York Times Service WARSAW — The Polish government has announced proposed steps to curb academic freedom, and the minister of higher education has defended them as necessary retreats forced by the "anti-state" and "anti-Socialist" activities of some university circles.

Amendments in the university law, all of which are virtually certain to be approved by parliament, call for greater supervision of university life by the Ministry of Higher Education limitation of tenure or junior faculty members, reduced participation in university self-government by students and nonteaching university employees estic I eterrore vone militarine o and the reintroduction of loyalty oaths to Communist precepts.

The amendments to the position of the life in his Education Act, over the opposition and of university senate resolutions and disapproving petitions, represent one of several tough new measures introduced by the government since the visit to Poland in April by Mikhail S. Gorbachev, the Soviet leader.

Since then, the penal code has been made more stringent, food prices have been increased, dissidents now on trial have been threatened with much harsher sentences than any handed down in the last two years and a historian has been dismissed from his job for his political views.

Also, a Communist Party conference began Wednesday to discuss ways of spurring recruitment of party workers in a country where most young people prefer the Roman Catholic Church to the ruling Communist Party.

At the time, the university law was pointed to by the Polish leader. General Wojciech Jaruzelski, as proof that liberalization would continue despite the crackdown on the Solidarity union movement.

After hearing brief statements from the defendants, Adam Michnik, Bogdan Lis and Wladyslaw Frasyniuk, Judge Krzysztof Zien-iuk said the verdict would be annomced Friday.

The prosecutor has demanded prison sentences of five years for Mr. Frasyniuk and four years each for Mr. Michnik and Mr. Lis. The defendants are charged with illegal union activities and inciting civil unrest by issuing a call for a 15-minute strike in February to protest government plans to raise food prices. The strike was canceled when the government decided to increase prices gradually.

Western reporters were barred from the courtroom. Family members and legal sources close to the da Due, or P-2, which gave its name case briefed correspondents on the proceedings.

month's local voting.
Two events turned the tide toward the government, according to political leaders in Rome.

The first, Mr. Castagno said, was a improvement in the economic situation. The second was the declarations by Communists that they would seek a share of power if they did well in the local voting and the referendum. "That scared people," said Mr. Del Pennino.

The Communists, according to Mr. Del Pennino, do best as a protest party in alliance with other groups. But a majority of voters still are wary of allowing them into the national government.

The Communist Central Committee met Wednesday to discuss the results, and one member said he expected the party to enter a difficuit period of reflection. The Communists have publicly pointed to the substantial affirmative vote as

Despite a series of messages from a group calling itself the Turkish Anti-Christian Liberation Front demanding her exchange for Mr. Agea, there is no firm evidence leftist Italian newspapers have sug-gested that Mr. Agca might have been persuaded to name the three Bulgarian defendants in the pre-P-2.

Testifying on his sixth day in the witness stand, Mr. Agca said: "It is certain that Orlandi is alive. She was certainly kidnapped by the powerful Masonic organization, P-2, of Licio Gelli, because this organization knew with certainty that I am Jesus Christ.

in the North — but publicly, at least, there is total confidence that his plan will prevail.

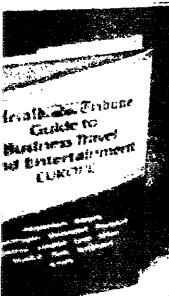

At the same time, officials here seem aware that a burden of distrust must be cleared away if the 72-year-old Kim or Kim Jong II, his son, 42, whom he has nominated as his successor, are to see the country reunited.

Bringing American correspondents here seems related to this. North Koreans who do business in the West say they are hoping that trade with the United States, currently nil, will develop to help break down "hostile feelings."

A visitor can see quickly that the distrust is not all on one side. Suspicions of foreigners, especially Americans, are close to the surface, fostered by decades of propaganda that have told North Koreans to watch for foreign subversion. Hotel waiters, tourist guides and shop as-sistants make efforts to be friendly to visitors, but conversations are restricted to routine affairs.

When a visitor asks about crime in the capital, an official replies that there are no thieves but that the security police still occasionally catch "spies." The remark is made with a smile, but seems intended to make its mark.

Establishing contact with the people seems virtually impossible. Daily itineraries are tightly scheduled with little free time, and the hotel at which Westerners are lodged sits in a willow-fringed park alongside the Poten River, a long walk to the city center. Even walks to the river bank to watch fishing and canoeing are escorted, and it is plain that any attempt to head for a solo trip into town would not be

Inhumanity in Congress

Anyone truly concerned about reducing in-fant mortality and other suffering in the devel-oping world knows how important a contribution voluntary family planning programs can make to that effort. Unfortunately, under cover of protesting against reported instances of infanticide and coerced abortion in China. opponents of family planning programs have been promoting vaguely worded amendments that would effectively block U.S. support for this essential humanitarian aid.

Concerned legislators in both Houses -- led by Senator Nancy Kassebaum and Represen-tative Olympia Snowe — know that the amendments pushed by Senator Jesse Helms and Representatives Jack Kemp and Chris Smith are neither necessary nor suitable for preventing U.S. aid from flowing to any such coercive programs. Senator Kassebaum and Representative Snowe are sponsors of amendments that would block any U.S. money from flowing directly or through other agencies to Chinese population programs. Senator Daniel Inouye is offering proposals that would deal still more directly with any abuses in China.

Foes of family planning will not settle for these strong but straightforward measures. Senator Helms has already succeeded in adding language to the Senate foreign aid reauthorization bill that would end all support for UN population programs despite the fact that the Reagan administration has twice reaffirmed that no UN money is used for any abortionrelated activities. Representative Smith will attempt to add even more damaging amendments to the House reauthorization measure.

Representative Kemp has added seemingly innocuous language to a House supplemental appropriations bill that according to his stated interpretation of its meaning, would also cut off the UN programs that are the main or only source of population aid for many of the poorest countries. Still another Helms ploy, unsuccessful thus far, defines abortion — not just coerced abortion but any legal abortion as practiced in the United States. Europe or anywhere else — as a human rights violation that the president could combat with the full force of his constitutional powers. Most senators and representatives understand that U.S. aid for foreign population planning is actually one of the best ways of reducing traditional reliance on abortion and infanticide. But, through a combination of inattention and fear of being branded as babykillers by the religious right, many have looked the other way while Senator Helms and his allies have tacked on their destructive amendments. These legislators may find this behavior convenient, but their consciences should remind them that it is also cowardly and cruel. - THE WASHINGTON POST.

Finding Mengele Matters

Does it really matter whether some bones and teeth are the remains of Josef Mengele? Forensic studies may or may not confirm his son's claim, which is suspiciously convenient, that the Nazi criminal died six years ago in Brazil. They will not resolve the wider question; Why keep hunting for the old men who once ran Hitler's murder machine? That evil empire lies buried and its former servants pose no further threat. Even if Josef Mengele, the barbarous "angel of death" at Auschwitz, is still alive, it is as a reclusive fugitive. Yet they should be hunted down. It does matter.

To take the question at its narrowest, Dr. Mengele is a fugitive from justice in West Germany, subject to deportation from Brazil or wherever. But he is not simply an escaped murderer. He butchered tens of thousands and performed gruesome so-called medical experiments on his victims. To shrug him off as a harmless old man shrugs off the crime and the world's debt to his victims.

The United States bears a special obligation because it let a number of war criminals slip to safety through its refugee programs after World War II. In 1979, after that sorry story became known, the Justice Department created an Office of Special Investigations to give chase. Under Allan Ryan, its first director, the office tracked down and deported former Nazis living under assumed identities. It exposed the shameful postwar recruiting of war criminals by American intelligence agencies, among them Klaus Barbie. With strong congressional support, the search continues.

Some people argue against the program, saying that the former Nazis have led quiet. productive lives and probably suffer with punshing memories. Mr. Rvan argues otherwise: "I see no evidence that any of these men have been slightly discomfitted. let alone tormented, by their actions in the past ... I know of no Nazi war criminal who has come forth to say, 'At last you have found me out. Let me unburden my conscience.

Should there not be a statute of limitations for crimes of so long ago? No. As Mr. Ryan rejoins, that would diminish the nature of the crimes. As long as the war criminals survive. they need to be confronted with their deeds, reinforcing memory. That need is dramatized by the residents of Dr. Mengele's hometown in Bavaria: He may have been a bad man, they say, but that was 40 years ago, and besides. didn't the Americans kill a lot of people by bombing Dresden? The pursuit of justice is not just a service to the past. Present and future generations will benefit if butchers are hunted to the end of their days.

Love and Common Sense

When she was four weeks old, a baby named Mary Anne Monahan was adopted by Julia and Joseph Quinlan of Morris County. New Jersey. They christened her Karen Ann. She lived for 31 years, the last decade of which entailed nothingness for her and an extraordinary ordeal for her parents.

The Ouinlans - mother, father, Karen Ann nally liable for removing the respirator, beand two younger children - lived what might cause the cause of Karen Ann's death would be called an ordinary life until Karen Ann was 20. Then she was laid off from her job, began to drift a bit and drink a bit. Plenty of 20-yearolds do that; it is often part of growing up. Karen Ann never finished growing up. One day she mixed alcohol and tranquilizers, and her life, at least her sentient life, was over.

When Karen Ann entered her fifth month of irreversible coma, Mr. and Mrs. Quinlan asked that their child's respirator be disconnected. Let her be allowed to die, they asked the court. and Mrs. Quinlan brought two invaluable "with grace and dignity." A Superior Court judge refused their request, but the New Jersey

Supreme Court upheld it in a landmark decision. As long as medical authorities saw "no reasonable possibility" that Karen Ann would recover, the court said, her interest in having her life-support system disconnected exceeded the state's interest in keeping her alive. Nor. the court added, could anyone be held criminot be homicide but natural causes.

Karen Ann did not die: she lived nine more years. A line, less detectable than a thread of light across the sky, divides research on and deployment of a "star wars" defense system. The administration has adamantly refused to put this matter on the table in Geneva, where the Soviets have made it their number one issue.

It is an issue that may never be resolved. The proposed defense system will prove difficult, if not impossible, to test fully. But much of the laboratory for the research is in the skies or in the hearts of vet-to-be-invented or yet-to-be-programmed computers that must reach far beyond the current state of the technology. It has been estimated that it will take some 10 million lines of program instructions, the writing of which would require years of work by thousands of technicians, to get close to developing a Strategic Defense Initiative.

NATO allies have justifiable concerns that Mr. Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative will lead to an arms race and that it is a major obstacle to real progress toward getting arms reduction agreements at Geneva.

1910: Republican Party in Disarray WASHINGTON - No political divining rod can point to the word "harmony" in the Republican party. Senators Aldrich and Hale, who have decided to retire, appear to be the only happy persons in the organization. So deep has become the resentment between the three or four factions into which the organization has been ripped and so widespread has grown the fratricidal strife that to bring about even a semblance of party unification is beyond the power of any one man. A great many Republicans who have about abandoned hope of success at the approaching Congressional and State elections have but one "anchor to windward." They say that if Theodore Roosevelt shall get behind the party and the administration there may be a chance to win.

1935: Factory Explodes in Germany

BERLIN - Hundreds of men and women are believed killed or injured in a series of explosions lasting five hours (on June 13) and which wrecked one of Germany's principal explosive factories, situated near Rheinsdorf, near Wittenberg, about 60 miles from here. About 3.000 workers employed by the factory were on the premises at the time and were trapped by the early explosions. Many are believed to be either dead or mutilated. All that could be learned with certainty was that 20 bodies have been recovered so far. The first explosion occurred at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, when the factory was working at full capacity. It is believed that a fire then started and that other explosions occurred at intervals until 9 o'clock, rendering approach impossible.

Most Wars Seem a Good Idea at the Time

P ARIS — The Israeli army, defeated, has pulled its last units out of Lebanon three years and 654 Israeli deaths after it went in. No one has counted how many Lebanese and Palestinians are dead, wounded or homeless as the direct or indirect result of Israel's invasion of Lebanon. It seemed like a good idea at the time.

As the final Israeli units crossed the border, for the first time in three years rockets from Leba-non began to fall on Galilee. Israel is digging a huge trench to separate the two countries. In Baghdad, the nights are interrupted by the explosions of surface-to-surface missiles from Iran. An Iraqi army of some half a million men is entrenched in the delta of the Tigris. Using mustard gas, as well as the best available European weapoury, it has, by gross slaughter, thus far saved Iraq from the mass onslaught of sacrificial and suicidal Iranian Revolutionary Guards incandescent with religious conviction. To invade Iran was something else that seemed a good idea at the time. President Saddam Hus-sein thought he could throttle the threat of Shiite integrism in its cradle. He calculated that it would be a simple matter to overrun a disorganized Iranian army and topple the reactionary religious regime that had just taken power in Tehran. Today no end to his war is in sight.

There are a good many wars which, at the time people began them or when they rashly interBy William Pfaff

Consider some other good ideas and how they worked out. Japan's aggression against China and quest for Asian empire ended in Japan's atomic defeat, with China, become Communist, awakened from its long sleep. The Spanish army's successful revolt against a left-wing government produced civil war, 40 years of Spanish alienation from Europe and the eventual return to power in Madrid of a left-wing government.

The British are only bluffing. In any case, they could never bring a force all that way."

Obviously there are wars that succeed. But there are few, if any, that go as planned. The odds are safely on the side of unpleasant surprise, confusion and a final outcome never imagined by those who decided to go to war. Good ideas about war are not to be trusted. What is to be trusted is what the Pursian soldier said to the be trusted is what the Russian soldier said to the Yugoslav peasant who welcomed him with gifts in 1944: "Father, keep your bread and salt. Don't you know that I bring death?"

The United States is conducting a war of nerves against the Sandinist government in Nicaragua. The aim is to topple that regime. It is an aim that a war of nerves is insufficient to achieve.

Real war is what overturns governments. The logic of this is making its way in Washington.

The ability of the United States to invade Nicaragua and seize control of its cities and communications is beyond serious doubt. The dispersential of forms is flamant. The U.S. disproportion of forces is flagrant. The U.S. Marine Corps alone is twice the size of the total would the operation, then, be "like falling off a log," as some American planners say?

In 1910, when the marines last invaded Nicaragua (to remain until 1933), there was no Cuban complication or Russian engagement in the Americas. Imperialism was respectable. It was thought inevitable. Small nations and their people expected to be dominated by big ones. The powers of Europe looked on with approval as the United States assured that foreigners and their property were respected in Nicaragua and that the country paid its debts to New York bankers.

Times have changed. There nonetheless are those in Washington who still believe in small wars as good ideas. What, after all, could go wrong? Ask Menachem Begin. Ask Saddam Hussein. Ask Lyndon Johnson and Richard Nixon. Ask that peasant, with his bread and salt.

South Africa: U.S. Opinion Leaves Reagan Behind

By Anthony Lewis

BOSTON - Why is the U.S. Con-D gress in such revolt against Presi-dent Reagan's policy on South Afri-ca? Administration officials say the whole thing puzzles them. If they mean that, here is a clue.

On March 21, police in Uitenhage shot into a group marching to a funeral and killed 20 people. That night Mr. Reagan had a press conference. and Sam Donaldson of ABC News asked him about "what appears to be a continuing wave of violence by the white minority government against the black majority population." The president answered in part:

"I think to put it that way, that they were simply killed and that the violence was coming totally from the law-and-order side, ignores the fact that there was rioting going on on behalf of others there ... There is an element in South Africa that do not want a peaceful settlement of this, who want a violent settlement, who want trouble in the streets, and this is what's going on."

Where did Mr. Reagan get the idea that there was "rioting" before the police fired? Presumably from South African officials who claimed that the marchers threw stones and gasoline bombs. But the government itself appointed a judge. Donald Kannemeyer, to investigate the massacre.

He reported this week. He found no police officer wrongfully responsi-ble for the killings, but his report is a devastating comment on the facts. The claim of stone-throwing the judge concluded, "was fabricated" in an attempt "to justify the shooting." Of 47 blacks killed and injured, 35 were shot in the back - a "disquieting" fact, he said. He found that the police had "deliberately" been equipped with weapons that kill instead of crowd-control devices such as tear gas and rubber bullets. Ronald Reagan's decisive instinct

That is the reality underlying the Reagan policy toward South Africa, and people know it. They do not want the United States to be on the side of racist governments that oppress the majority of their citizens and shoot

That certainly is what South African blacks see. And it is what Pretoria sees, so it believes it can continue its oppressive policies without worrying about serious pressure from the Reagan administration. South Africa's record since the Uitenhage massacre has been of continuing official violence. In one week in May three blacks died while in police custody or hours after being released. Not even underground pressions survive. Ruling by decree, the regime controls virtually all aspects of life, intrading deeply into personal family and religious matters.

Yet Washington is soft on this Stalinism. It rarely questions Romania's human rights abuses. Instead, it grants Romania trade privileges and loudly praises its relatively independent foreign policy. This prompted a public protest by David Funderburk. who recently resigned as the U.S. ambassador to Romania, accusing senior administration officials of overrating Bucharest's independence from Moscow while downplaying the harshness of its internal practices. Romania does not hesitate to use brutal tactics to suppress dissent.

Usually it uses more subtle but note less efficient administrative sanctions. It punishes without the pretext of a trial, and coerces citizens simply by administrative order. Such measures include exile, forced labor, dismissal from jobs, eviction and denial of wages, food and medicine. Romania suppresses religion. It bans religious education for the young regulates distribution of Bi-bles, requires licenses for places of worship and presses believers to work on Christmas and other religious holidays. It is demolishing historic churches and monasteries. Dissident Roman Catholic, Protestant and Romanian Orthodox leaders have been imprisoned, even killed. While Romania maintains diplomatic ties with Israel and permits steady emigration of Jews, a recent decline in that emigration and the appearance of anti-Semitic publications have evoked concern.

Thousands of Romanians have seen denied the right to emigrate, including those seeking medical treatment abroad or family reunification. Merely requesting exit permission triggers such reprisals as job demotion or dismissal, eviction and denial of essential goods and services. Ethnic Hungarians, the largest minority, are persecuted. Conditions have been deteriorating alarmingly. With the media under direct government control, a new concrete requiring police registration of private typewriters further restricts information. In 1984, West Germany uncovered a Romanian bombing plot against Radio Free Europe.

Most-favored-nation status provides important leverage that should be used to obtain significant concessions in human rights performance. The Jackson-Vanik amendment links trade status with rights guarantees, Since 1975, Romania has had mostfavored-nation treatment without having to conform to Jackson-Vanik standards. Presidents annually waive the provision and Congress acquisoes after holding perfunctory hearings. Last year the House did not even bother with this gesture. Negotiations on enhancing the rights of Romanians who choose not to emigrate ought to precede renewal of most-favored-nation status. The Reagan administration should request specific reforms in diverse area and establish a definite timetable, and should temporarily suspend facommunity never had a snowball's vored status until the talks are satishope in hell? hearings, and press for reforms. Few Americans advocate severing an important link with Eastern Europe. But Bucharest is unlikely to let that happen. President Nicolae Ceausescu personally sought trade benefits in 1975, and no doubt during his nation's current economic crisis he still prizes them.

Faced with past threats to mostfavored-nation status, he agreed to demands to rescind an education tax on emigrants, increase emigration and free political prisoners. It serves American interests to press for improvements that will strengthen Romanian pluralism and institutions.

Hector Guimard and His Art Nouveau Paris

It was the Castel Beranger at 14 Rue La Fontaine, Guimard's undisputed masterpiece, that is considered to have introduced the style to France.

The wrought-iron entry gate, with its graceful grill of curves opening onto the entry hall lined with sculpted stone panels, might alone have been enough to merit the prize for best facade of 1899, in a competition sponsored by the newspaper Le Figaro. (After the prize was awarded, Guimard announced his three guiding points of design: logic, harmony and sentiment. He also had postcards printed of the apartment and gave personal tours.)
The rest of the building is unusual as well:

The window railings - usually black on Paris apartment houses — are turquoise, as is the rest of the building's ironwork and trim. The painter Paul Signac was one of the first occupants. "You'll love the blue staircase," he wrote to his friends.

Also on Rue La Fontaine, at number 60, is a charming, three-story, asymmetrical pri-vate home Guimard designed, and at 17, 19 and 21 is a block of apartments with black window railings of twining tendrils as intri-cately detailed as spider webs. The windows themselves, close examination shows, have slightly rounded corners. Guimard built his own home (1909-12) at 122 Avenue Mozart. The walls are never straight, but bend and flow like a sheet of paper in the breeze. It stands across from the Villa Flore, built more than a decade later, which shows Guimard moving in the direction of Art Déco.

Those buildings came at the tail end of the Art Nouveau movement (1909-1911). The peak of Art Nouveau design, the one that elevates ornament to symbol, was the Métro

A competition had been organized for the design of the Metro entrances, and even before this, there had been considerable debate over the designs. Charles Garnier - the architect of the Paris Opera, warned against anything that would suggest industrial design and proposed entrances with antiquestyle pillars, preferably in onyx, bronze or

But the head of the Compagnie Générale du Métropolitain de Paris had been so smit-ten with the elegance and originality of the Castel Béranger that he decided to ignore the results of the competition, as well as Garnier's suggestions, and hire Guimard.
One of the most striking remaining examples of Guimard's Métro work is the entrance to the Porte Dauphine station. The arch is crowned with glass panels held up by thin iron beams; the effect is that of a transparent fan spread open at an upward angle Salvador Dali called them "divine entrances . . . by the grace of which one can descend into the subconscious region of the living, kingly aesthetic of the future." Not everyone was so enthusiastic. In the late 1930s many of the entrances were removed. The New York Museum of Modern Art acquired part of the Bastille station entry. And in Paris, many of the entrances remain in good condition and others have been

Y UIMARD also designed many other buildings in the Paris area, from Le Vésinet in the west to Villemoisson in the east. The stone house in Villemoisson, at 2 Avenue de la Mare-Tambour, is one of his most original creations, with its abundance of arches of varying sizes, curves and angles and topped by an oddly shaped tower. He also designed Art Nouveau-style houses in Lille and Lyon.

The concave, arched facade of his synagogue at 10 Rue Pavée, in the part of the Marais that has been Paris's Jewish quarter from medieval times, is more sober and less ornate than his private homes. Its shape suggests an altar, and is impressive for its solution of a difficult situation: a tall, sacred building on a narrow street, squeezed between two apartment blocks.

But his last houses in Paris, at 18 Rue Henri-Heine, and 36-38 Rue Greuze, built in the late '20s as Art Nouveau was going out of style, lack warmth and show little of the personality and originality of his earlier buildings. He withheld his signature from the brick building on Rue Greuze. After the decline of Art Nouveau he continued to design, but without great recognition or criti-cal success. He moved to New York in 1938. and died there four years later.

Not all of Guimard's houses have survived. One of his most lauded creations, the Castel Henriette, was destroyed in the 1970s. Maurice Rheims, who wrote the text for the Paz one of the few celebrated Mexicans who still lives in the center of the capital, where traffic and pollution run as thick and redolent as a Mexican mole sauce, sits in his comfortable study, sealed off from the noise of the nearby Pasco de la Reforma and explains that it has all been an accident. He was born across the street in what is now a shop-lined Disneyland of a tourist center called the Zona Rosa. All he ever wanted to do was to be a poet. He says he is not a Sartre. "Sartre was mainly an ideologue, a man of ideas. I am a man of sensibility. I hope I am a man of sensibility. I have a few ideas. I want to be a poet, not a philoso-

He recalls learning as a child a story of Alexander the Great being asked, "What do you want to be, Homer or Achilles?" Paz says Alexander replied, "This is absurd. You ask me if I want to be the hero or the trumpeter of the hero. I want to be the hero." The poet's gentle and, in spite of some lines, almost youthful face, with narrow. kind, elfin eyes, expands with delight. "I found this answer absurd. I found that to be the trumpeter was much more interesting."

"And since this time I have found that writers, who are not the heroes of history but rather the witnesses of history, the witnesses of life - well, it's important to be a witness." Some of the books for which he is best known, such as "Labyrinth of Solitude" (1950), an essay on the Mexican character, are not poetry. Paz says he never intended to write these books. "No, no. That was an accident," he protests.

"When I was really young I wanted to write poetry. Then I found more and more that there were periods when I could not and Japanese culture and says of contempo-

He lived several times on both coasts as a child, a young poet and a diplomat. During World War II, as a diplomat in New York, he began thinking of the "Labyrinth of Solitude" to explain why he felt so different from Americans, "Everything was different," he recalls. The book was an attempt to explain

The former diplomat finds that dialogue between the United States and Mexico, to which he says both countries are "condemned," is difficult and often bitter be-cause of historical differences, "We were born in different moments in history," he says. "The U.S. is a true modern country. Mexico is a very old country with a pre-mo-dern past. Not a Western past. The past is still alive."

We are modern and we are not modern," he says. "It is a country of we are and we are not. We are Western and we are not-... Mexico City is a modern city but it is not very modern. The attitudes of the people are often 16th-, 17th- and 18th-century atti-

HILE he feels these differences deal with the modern world outside," he also thinks Americans for different reasons are unable to deal with foreigners. The United States "is a country that can accept all foreign things, that is why it is an open country, but when they try to talk with foreigners, they are unable to do it.

From a material and political point of view, the United States is an empire. But they don't want to be. They want to be outside of history."

Paz says he even became a diplomat "by accident." His friend, the Chilean poet Pablo Neruda, who was in Mexico as the general consul, first suggested it. "He said to me, You don't have money and you work too much. You should try to find a place in the foreign service and you will work less," " Paz

But with 24 years of foreign service behind him, in the United States, Geneva, Japan, 10 years in Paris and six years as ambassador to India, he says, "It gave me another education. I suppose that every man must re-do his own education many times." Paz feels he re-educated himself twice, first in Europe then in Asia.

He is particularly impressed with Chinese rary Japanese novels, "It's one of the literatures that is alive for me."

He was struck on a recent trip to Asia to find a resurgence of traditional Japanese theater. "This is not only continuation but revival of traditions. You cannot find, for instance, in Spain or Latin America, Lope de ega or Calderon so easily."

"For the Spanish Catholic tradition ideas ideology is always compact. Totally. And his life is the same. The Japanese and the Chinese are the masters of the conjunction of positions . . . I think Latin Americans should learn more about this experience . . . this capacity to embrace opposites."

But it was his European experiences that made a mark on Latin America, especially his contacts with Andre Breton and the Sur realists. Paz says of his native Mexico, a land where artisans dress fleas in tiny costumes and picnics are held with dead relatives on cemetary lawns, "It is one of the few spontaneously surrealistic countries. I suppose you can be surrealist when you don't know you are surrealist. As soon as you know you are surrealist, it's very difficult to be surrealist."

Paz acknowledges a great debt to Europe. While he still admires some contemporary European writers, especially from Eastern Europe, such as Czeslaw Milosz and Milan Kundera, he says, "I don't suppose a 25year-old Mexican today would have the same inspiration as we had in the '30s from European culture. But that's a fact. In the United States I don't find great writers such as Faulkner, Eliot or William Carlos Wil-

E also sees this as a quiet moment in Latin American meaning does not mourn the so-called boom does not mourn the so-called boom that made literature of his region fashionable in the 1970s. "This period of silence in Latin American literature is good because I don't believe very much in publicity," he says.

"I think it is very bad for a work of art. One of the bad things in the United States is that they sometimes kill their own writers and their own artists with too much success. Success is as bad as indifference."

But he also says that Latin American literature is quiet because of a change in genera-tions. "A changing of hands," he calls it. "This is a moment when our best novelists and poets are now between 45 and 55 and must do their best work. That we will see in five years," he predicts.

"Perhaps the idea of thinking in terms of Europe or Latin America," he says thought-fully, sinking into a well padded chair, "per-haps all this is a thing of the past. Perhaps we are going to have good literature in different places. I mean one of the facts is that there are no centers now of world civilization. For instance, the last center for art, especially painting, was Paris. Then New York was a center, but New York in some way has different characteristics than Paris. The New York painters are very good but they are not the center of the world."
"Where are the gods, the corn-god, the flower-god, the water-god, the blood-god, the virgin? Have they all died, have they all departed, broken waterjars at the edge of the blocked fount?" he wrote in a celebrated 1955 poem "The Broken Waterjar."

He points out in a rare moment of self indulgence that he was one of the first to talk of the end of modernity as early as 1966 in Paris. "That's why it is very difficult at this moment to discern a movement in Paris or New York or in Mexico."

"We are in the age of diversity and individuality, not movements, not cities, not ereat centers but individual creators, and that is important."

The Wild Horses of Merfelder Moor, Or Rodeo as a Princely Tradition

by David Galloway

ULMEN, West Germany — The thunder of 800 hooves builds the dramatic prelude, and then the panicked animals surge into the arena. While the mares pirouette to shelter their newborn foals, men dart among them to separate the male yearlings from the herd. In teams of two and three the broncobusters wrestle the colts to the ground, bridle them with hemp, and lead them to the blacksmith's forge for branding.

Any resemblance to Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show is purely coincidental. The annu-al roundup on the Merfelder moor in central Germany began long before William Cody was born. Europe's last genuinely "wild" horses can be officially dated to the year 1316, when a patent for hunting and fishing rights first made written reference to the animals. Like the game that thrived on this gentle plain, the horses had presumably ex-isted here for centuries before, and they were prized as a delicacy for the hunter's table. Zoologists confirm their prehistoric ancestry, and art historians have noted an uncan-ny resemblance to the shaggy ponies depict-ed in cave paintings at Lascaux and Altamira. Signs of interpreeding with runaway cavalry mounts or farm horses emerge from time to time, but the dominant types descend from the Mongolian pony or the Russian tarpan. Dun or mouse-gray, they bear a dark stripe from mane to tail, and are

The woods and marshes of Westphalia once sheltered numerous herds, but most of them vanished as land was cleared and drained for farming. The Dülmen breed owes its continuing existence to the dukes of Croy, who settled in the area in 1836 and immediately created a refuge for the remaining wildlife. Today the tract encompasses more than 600 acres, and there are plans to incorporate additional woodlands as a buffer against increased traffic from a new autobahn spur.

The ease of access has dramatically boosted tourism in one of Germany's most idyllic landscapes. Situated due north of the smoking chimneys of the Ruhr district, the lush Munsterland is dotted with romantic manor houses, moated castles and wide-gabled brick farmhouses. The capital city of Münster, northeast of Dülmen, is celebrated for its medieval town center and Romanesque cathedral, but the charm of the region is in its natural bounty. The market town of Dulmen is ringed by game parks, woods and rhododendron gardens, and tourists are encouraged to rent bicycles to make the picturesque tour. On Saturdays, Sundays and holidays, from March through October, as many as 3,000 visitors pay a call on the wild horses. The animals are herded onto a hillside on those days and enclosed by a temporary fence, but that precaution is among the few concessions to their well-being. Windmills fill water troughs in the dry months, and hay is provided for all the local game when the snows are heavy. Otherwise, the herd ranges free in winter and summer, without shelter or special feeding or the services of a veteri-

NLY the sturdiest foals survive the NLY the sturdiest toals survive the rigors of winter, but they regularly number 40 colts and 80 fillies. To prevent inbreeding and territorial conflicts, the yearling colts are auctioned off before an enthusiastic audience of 30,000 spectators. It is part rodeo, part carnival, part old-fashioned Volksfest, with pony clubs and trick riders who perform before the herd makes its dramatic entrance. Local farmers and woodsmen drive the animals toward the funnel-shaped fence that spills them into the arena promptly at 3 P.M. on the last Saturday in May.

Easily tamed and put to harness, the longlived Dülmener was once prized by farmers and draymen for its economical, broadshouldered service. Today few of the colts are bought for hard labor, but are ridden by children or hitched to cartloads of tourists taking the air of the Münsterland. As a result, the price has fallen from a high of $300 in the postwar years to an average of $150 at the most recent auction. One American visitor, unable to resist such a bargain, was discovered trying to wedge her new pet into the back seat of a Cadillac.

FW places in the world are as underrated as Sicily. To many people, and perhaps especially to cans, Sicily is the land of the Mafia, of poverty, of women in black shawls and tacitum men, of violence and clans and uncertainty. But Sicily may be the most attractive, most culturally privileged place in the complicated, recently established country called Italy.

To begin with, few places have been occu-pied by more foreign powers —that is one of the reasons the Mafia came into being. But it is also the reason why Sicily has some of the best Greek rains in the world; why it has Arab and Norman buildings, and why parts of Palermo look like Bourbon Spain. And whatever damage they did, the occupiers usually — although not always — respected what had been built before they came. The dialect is as much a pastiche as the architecture, with Greek words and French words, Arab words and Spanish.

There are many approaches to Sicily. It can be, like Cyprus or parts of southern France, a place to relax, read and stare peacefully into a sunset. It can be a lesson to be learned, a place that contains pieces of the history of so many other places as well as its own. It is an island where you can eat and drink well, swim and hike up in the mountains. You can even ski. Whatever you choose to do, you can be certain that Sicilians will be warm - although the friendliness toward outsiders can be matched by a

You will hear stories of robberies along the roadside, and some of them are true. It is best to adopt a certain caution that the Sicilians practice themselves. But there are other stories, too. Once, when I was driving from Palermo to Trapani, my car broke down. The car stopped near the exit for claim to being the home of the rich pastries called cannoli. I shared a ride into town on a small truck with a newborn calf; the local farmers, the owner of the single cafe in town, the children gathered for their afternoon candy all seemed to want to do whatever they could to get my car moving again. And the cannoli were great. What follows is one approach, with some variations. You can fly to Palermo, Trapani or Catania; then, where you choose to start. how fast you want to go, depend on which Sicily you are seeking.

AORMINA is carved into a hillside that drops 675 feet straight down into L the warm, blue Mediterranean and looks up to snow-capped Mount Etna. Its well-preserved Greek theater, set into the hills, dates from the third century B.C. The best approach is from the Taormina North exit from the main highway. The drive up the mountainside at times cuts through the rocks. To one side are the hills that rise up to the ruined walls of the village of Castelmola;

on the other side, a drop straight to the sea. The city has been amply discovered by others, notably Germans and Scandinavians, and it can be crowded, in season and out. But if you are not obsessed with getting away from other people, Taormina amply rewards a visit. Some people spend hours in the terraced gardens behind the San Domenico Palace Hotel in the late afternoon and at dusk, scanning the sky from Mount Ema to the sea. It is the sort of sunset you are unlikely to see anywhere else. Taormina bears a certain resemblance to resorts in southern France, partly because of the quality of the food and accommodations available. Two hotels bear particular men-tion: The San Domenico Palace is a converted 15th-century monastery. The hallways are wide and the room doors are tiny, giving the impression that you are about to enter a monk's spare cell, although the some of the rooms are in fact large. Access to the hillside garden is worth the price of the room, though the food can be uneven. The Hotel Timeo is a good choice for staying, eating, or both. In addition to the view of the mountain and the sea, the terrace looks directly down into a well-maintained garden.

South of Taormina, on the way to Syracuse, leave the main road just north of Cata-nia to explore some of the area's small sea-side towns. Aci Trezza, for example, is part Atlantic City, part Sicilian small town. There is a series of winding back roads through a rich countryside that leads to the sea. In Pozzilo, you can drink one of Sicily's most famous mineral waters at the source and watch the fishermen repair their nets. Catania itself can be passed by, though its cathedral square is worth a look and there are some good restaurants.

Syracuse, 65 miles to the southeast, is a singular reminder of the extraordinary com-plexity of Sicily's past. In its heyday, the city had little to do with Rome or Italy. It was founded by Corinthian colonists in eighth century B.C. and became one of the wealth-

Greece. (It was also the home of Archimedes, the geometrician.) For this reason, Syracuse has some of the finest Greek ruins in the world. Its theater dates from the fifth century B.C., and Aeshylus "Persians" had its opening night there. The theater is in the middle of an archaeological park — it closes an hour before sunset — that also includes the Paradise Quarry, a series of remarkable grottoes and caverns.

The old town (Ortygia) is in some senses the new town. The cathedral is built on what were the foundations of the Temple of Minerva. The cathedral and the palazzos on the cathedral square — a lively place in the early evening - offer a series of journeys out of the Greek and into the Baroque. On Sunday afternoons, the whole region seems to de-scend on the waterfront for a passeggiata. And, as Cicero said, "There's not a day without sun in Syracuse.' If you return to Taormina and then journey north toward Messina the next day, you are in for one of the world's great coastal drives. Keep a map of Italy in your head and watch as the toe of Calabria gets closer and closer until it seems you can almost jump across. The road is a remarkable alternation of tunnels and clear seaside driving. At Messina, you can take a look at the straits: the town itself has suffered badly from earthquakes over the centuries and most of it has en rebuilt since the great tremors of 1908. The northern coast between Messina and Palermo is a long run of small towns and quiet beaches. Two in particular are worth a visit. Cefain is a small fishing town with a Norman Romanesque cathedral. In his fine book on Sicily, "The Golden Honeycomb," Vincent Cronin reports that the cathedral the votive offering of King Roger II to God for saving him from a storm at sea. According to legend. Roger promised to build a cathedral wherever he was brought to safety and was miraculously brought to what was then the Arab town of Cefalit. "Both the vow and its fulfillment are worthy of a man who combined faith and works, love of beauty and love of battle." Cronin wrote. Battle is about the last thing this peaceful town would bring to mind, although its beaches have spurred a hotel building boom which has not quite gotten out of hand.

The town of Collesano, between Cefalit and Palermo, seems like a large bazaar specializing in Sicilian pottery. Some of its kilns have been working since the 16th century.

ALERMO finds its way into the newspapers for organized crime outrages of all sorts, yet it is both a most modern city and a place where a noble old downtown and rambling outdoor markets beckon. It is a mad collection of blood lines, traditions, architectural styles and sensibilities, a jumble of Norman, Spanish Baroque, Fascist and modern buildings. The Arab influence is still felt, no more so than in the thriving street markets that so on for blocks. thriving street markets that go on for blocks in the center of town.

Palermo brings home the cyclical nature of history, the rise and fall of one civilization after another. Palermitans are often said to be cynical, a cynicism that arises from the need to adapt to a bizatre range of occupying powers. This was once an entirely Arab city with scores of mosques, far closer to Tunisia than Milan Islam was replaced by Christianity, the Arab style by the Norman, the mosques by churches. Then it was a Spanish city and now it is Italian. At certain times in its history, it was one of the important cul-tural centers of Europe.

The extraordinary contradictions of Palermo are brought home on almost every block, in almost every building. The Palace of the Normans, on the highest point of the old city, was built by the Saracens, expanded by the Normans, restored by the Spaniards, it is est and most powerful cities of Greater still the seat of government. Its Palatine

Chapel, built by Roger II. is regarded as one of the most remarkable architectural achievements in all of Italy. Its mosaics are Greek-inspired; its ceiling is of Arab work-manship, and its marble work is Norman. The inscriptions are in Greek, Latin and Palermo is a city that knows poverty, but also extremes of wealth. Its modern center boasts a fashionable shopping district, and Palermitans who talk about the profits of the illegal drug trade point out that while, on paper, the town has one of the lowest average incomes in Italy, it also has one of the highest rates of consumer spending.

Palermo is one of the best places to try Sicilian food. There is fish of all kinds, and the shellfish is excellent (though many would warn that the initial pleasure is not worth the stomach trouble the lobsters and clams might cause you later). Sicilian wine is also worth trying. As throughout Italy, decent wine is remarkably cheap, good wine hardly

HE inland road from Palermo to-Agrigento, on the southern coast, takes you through what might be called the Wyoming of Sicily, a land of scrub brush, vast plains leading to buttes and then to distant mountains. You expect to see Clint Eastwood riding off into the sunset (which he may well have done, since this is the land of spaghetti westerns). The drive, which takes a couple of hours, takes you far away from beach resorts and through sometruly wild terrain.

Agrigento, like Syracuse, offers a remarkable view of ancient Greek civilization. The Valley of Temples rightly draws visitors from all over the world. The Temple of Concord is the best preserved and the Temple of Hercules is believed to be the oldest: dating back to the sixth century B.C. Other temples in various states of preservation in-clude those to Juno Lacinia, Jove and Castor and Pollux. The area is especially striking atsunrise and sunset Southeast of Agrigento is an area not often visited but worth a day trip. Ragusa has two fine Baroque churches, the cathedral of San Giovanni Battista and the church of San Giorgio. Nearby is the castle of Donnafugata, a well preserved manor house built in the 1300s. Comiso, now the home of the NATO missile base, has a rich artisanal tradition; Scieli and Modica are pretty 18thcentury towns.

Another trip from Palermo very much worth making is to Trapani and especially to Erice, perched atop Monte San Giuliano. Erice is perhaps the best preserved medieval town in Sicily. Going back many centuries, the town was a religious center to the goddesses of love and fertility of the various leading powers: Astarte of the Phoenicians, Aphrodite of the Greeks and Venus of the oman. It reached its height of prosperity and importance in the 13th and 14th centuries, and then steadily lost influence to Trapani. Its charm lies in its long neglect; today it stands as a beautiful relic to another era. overlooking its now busier rival.

Sicily, associated with bright colors and large gestures, is deceptively subtle, a subtlety related to the Rococo and the Baroque and perhaps also to that sense of the absurd associated with Pirandello, who came from the Agrigento countryside. The people can be just as subtle: a mixture of circumspection and openness, of cunning and warmth.

But however Sicily's contradictions are turned around — whether you choose to regard it as the Orient's gateway to Europe or Europe's door to the Arab world, as the conquered island or the island that absorbed something from everyone — it will reward those who try to understand it, those who keep searching.

FOR FUN AND PROFIT

On Bringing the Airport Closer to the Passenger

by Roger Collis

HE problem "of providing a suitable landing platform for flying ma-chines in large cities has always puzzled engineers," wrote the avia-tion correspondent of The Illustrated London News of Oct. 18, 1919. A futuristic solution at that time was an elevated circular landing strip that would allow pilots "to start and alight dead against the wind as they always must." A neat example of lateral thinking even if the thing never got off the

But finally, modern technology has come up with a better idea: the City of London Stolport (short takeoff and landing sixport), which will be built in a derelict dock area in the east of the city specifically to serve the business traveler. The government gave the go-ahead three weeks ago after a rancorous four-year debate with environmentalists and tocal authorities. The Stolport, which will cost around $15 million, should be operating by mid-1987. It is a seminal idea that may have a cascade effect. There is a proposal for a similar installation in Sheffield, serving a population of five million in the north of England. And according to some insiders, pressure may be building up in France for a downtown Stolport in Paris.

"We believe we can cut an hour off the journey time to Paris from the center of London. Our passengers will be landing at Charles de Gaulle before they would take off... from Heathrow or Gatwick," says Charles Stuart, chairman of Plymouth-based Bry-mon Airways, which will be one of the main carriers to use the Stolport. He asserts that it is only a 20-minute taxi ride from the Bank of England plus 15 minutes to check in and board the plane. Bankers from the Continent could arrive on the morning flights before their counterparts in the City have had time to furl their umbrellas.

f Cultures,

Brymon plans several flights a day to Paris, Amsterdam and Brussels, with the later possibility of Zurich, Geneva, Antwerp, Rotterdam and Frankfurt, as well as destinations in Britain, such as Aberdeen and Belfast. Jersey European Airways is hoping to fly from the Stolport to Paris, and Manx Airlines has applied for routes to Paris, Brus-sels and Amsterdam.

The Stolport is an example of how regional or commuter airlines are responding to a growing business market by developing a comprehensive network of services across Europe. According to Robert Bonhoff, sec-retary-general of the European Regional Airlines Association in Geneva, regional traffic is growing at a faster rate than that on major airlines. Certainly, many regional carriers report significant increases in traffic. For example, Crossair in Zurich, which carried 286,000 passengers in 1984, reports a 53percent increase so far this year, RFG in Dortmund, in northern West Germany, predicts a 50-percent increase in 1985; while Connectair, which has 1,400 passengers a mouth between Gatwick and Antwerp, reports a load factor of 65 percent ("As good as you're ever going to get without turning people away at peak flights"). And Brymon expects to carry nearly half of the estimated 1.2 million passengers who will use the Stolport in year five or six after its completion.

What the business flier wants is choice, convenience and comfort. This means choice of a convenient airport as well as airline. The so-called national carriers go some way to providing this with business-class cabins, priority check-ins, executive lounges and so on. But you still have the hassle of getting out to far-flung megaports and fighting your way through crowds less dedicated than yourself. For short-hanl flights within Europe between major hubs, actual flying time can be as little as 20 percent of total door-to-door journey time.

The solution is to bring the plane to the passenger, either by linking thinner markets to the major hubs (like Plymouth to Paris) or to the major nubs (nke raymoun w rans) us to other small airports (like Plymouth to Cork). After all, how many people who fly to Paris actually want to go to Paris? Regional airlines perform both these roles, providing customized business service almost as if they were scheduled corporate aircraft.

Regional airlines (which typically operate 9- to 40-seat planes) are themselves well served by advancing technology. The new generation of pressurized turboprops are quiet, fast and comfortable and up to 30 percent more fuel efficient than their predecessors. For example, there is the 33-seat Saab-Fairchild 340, which entered service recently with Crossair; the 30-seat Embraer Brasilia (from the folks who make the Ban-deirante, the DC-3 of commuter planes); the 64-seat Rae Advanced Turbo Prop, which is scheduled to make its maiden flight in August 1986, and the 50-seat four-engined de Havilland Dash 7 - a plane that is not only ultra quiet, but has an exceptional short takeoff and landing performance, being able to descend at a steep seven-degree slope compared with two or three degrees needed for a conventional approach.

It is for these reasons that the Dash 7 is thought to be the only plane capable of operating from the City of London Stolport's 760-meter (828-yard) runway. The Dash 7 has set the limit for noise levels, which are of major environmental concern Night flights have been banned weekday flights are limited to 120 a day and 40 on Sundays and public holidays. This will mean an effective limit of about two million passengers a year.

Moreover, for the Stolport to be really effective, you need a similar Stolport at the other end. Until this happens, Stuart is pushing for "STOL" procedures for airports like Charles de Gaulle. "We don't see why we shouldn't operate outside a conventional pattern; we only need a marginal strip. But this will take a couple of years, I'm sure," he says. Large European airports are far less hospitable to small aircraft than those in the United States.

This highlights a problem for regional carriers. In order for them to develop feeder routes into the major hubs, they need to come to terms with the hegemony of the national airlines, such as Air France at Charles de Gaulle, British Airways at Heathrow and British Caledonian at Gatwick. But many have established a symbiotic relationship, when it is in the national carrier's interest, either by flying regional services under their auspices or "interlining" through their computerized reservations systems. For example, Crossair operates regional flights from Switerzland to Düsseldorf and Paris on behalf of Lufthansa and Swissair; RFG carries British Caledonian colors on flights between Dortmund and Gatwick as does Connectair between Gatwick and Antwerp; and Air UK, from Norwich to Amersterdam is inked to the KLM reservation system.

Bonhoff believes there is a danger that some national carriers may move in and grab regional routes once they have been built up by smaller airlines. (Lufthansa is already in the business with a 40 percent share in DLT. Germany's largest regional airline.) "We need regulatory instruments to identify and stop predatory behavior and abuse of dominant positions. That goes for airports as well as airlines," he says.

Phil Chapman, a director of Air UK, is also apprehensive, especially about the British proposal to deregulate its domestic services except for the busy routes to Heathrow and Gatwick, which means that only the regionals will be exposed to competition. "It only needs a dilution of 5 percent in traffic to make our routes unprofitable. A privatized British Airways could become a monopoly operation in a year. Ninety-four percent of U. S. revenues come from five airlines. God help us over here," Chapman says. However, deregulation in the United States has spurred the growth of regional airlines, which carried a record 26 million passengers in 1984, an increase of 20 percent on the previous year. And in Europe, moves toward partial deregulation are having a similar catalytic effect.

First has been the liberalizing effect of the recent bilaterals between the Britain and the Netherlands, Belgium and Germany, epitomized by the "open skies" policy in the Netherlands. It is significant that there are now more flights from British regions to Amsterdam and Rotterdam than there are to London. Second has been the inter-regional directive of the European Community, which allows free entry for aircraft carrying up to 70 passengers on routes between "category two" airports. This has met with derision by some regional carriers because it excludes the major hubs ("It's a lousy piece of legislation," Bonhoff says). But it could be the thin end of a deregulation wedge. The directive is due for review in 1986 and there's a good chance that free access will be extended to "category one" airports.

Whether or not this happens, it is to regional airlines that the business traveler will be looking for choice, comfort and convecording to the present duke of Croy, but it is also far from being a simple hobby. For him as for his elder son, 30-year-old Prince Rudolf, it is a family tradition whose validity is never questioned. Indeed, a history of dispossession and displacement has encouraged them to cling to such customs with particular

The dukes of Croy trace their title to 12thcentury Picardy, but subsequent ties to Prussia prompted Napoleon to scize most of their French holdings in 1803. In 1836 they settled in Westphalia and were later granted princely prerogatives by the emperor. A remaining chateau in northern France was confiscated at the end of World War I as "enemy property," and the castle in Dilmen was firebombed in the final days of World War IL

The family resettled in a former forester's house, and Prince Carl Emanuel Ludwig Petrus Eleonore Alexander Rudolf Engelbert, now the 14th duke of Croy, married Princess Gabrielle, granddaughter of the last king of Bavaria. Under Allied occupation there was talk of redistributing the ducal lands, but the greatest threat was a military order to dispose of the wild horses as a useless luxury. The prince promptly de-manded an appointment with the British authorities, and includy discovered "an officer who understood such things."

Today, when the overseer ceremonially informs "His Grace" of the year's catch, the old duke's eyes glisten with sentimental pleasure. At such moments it is difficult to picture this shy, gentle presence as one of the shrewdest (and least known) speculators of based in Wupperial, West Germany.

the Wirtschaftswunder. The business career began with his first sip of Coca-Cola in 1945, and he was soon collecting franchises for Belgium and West Germany. One was for Hamburg, where his colorful partner was Max Schmeling, the former heavyweight boxing champion.

The duke's children have inherited the work ethic that now complements a sense of noblesse oblige. Like his father, Prince Rudolf studied law and he has completed an apprenticeship at company headquarters in Toronto. Prince Stefan works for a London stockbroker, while Princess Marie-Theresa is studying Spanish at Munich University in preparation for examinations as a simultaneous translator.

Not surprisingly, even the "losing business" of horsebreeding is managed with strict, no-nonsense professionalism. Before the buffer zone protecting the herd can be extended, complex reallocations of land will have to be negotiated by the 20-man team that administers "Croy and Co." Only on the last Saturday in May, when relatives gather from throughout the world and the youngest is paraded round the arena behind a brisk span of Dülmeners, are the workaday realities temporarily forgotten.

(The horses can be seen 10 A.M. to 6 P.M., March 1 through Oct. 31. Reservations for the annual roundup can be made through Herzog von Croy'sche Verwalnung, Schloss Park I, 4408 Dülmen, West Germany.)

Restaurant Jean Bardet captured a second Michelin star this year, and the Guide Gault-Millau awarded it a rating equal to that of Taillevent in Paris and Troisgros in Roanne. So soon everyone began heading for the Berry region in search of the freshness, the creative regionalism, the great wine list, the incredible farm goat cheese, the warm and refreshing atmosphere that was putting the hometown of the actor Gerard Depardieu on

by Christine Chapman

HIMODA, Japan - For Westerners traveling to Japan, going to the port city of Shimoda is a romantic journey into the history of Japan's for-eign affairs. Fact, legend, pomp and pageant mingle in this lovely town on the southeastern tip of the Izu peninsula, about 100 miles from Tokyo. Its setting is reminiscent of views from the Grande Corniche or, as some Shimodians say, of Monterey in California. Unsatisfactory from the beginning as a trading port, Shimoda was the symbol to the ruling Tokugawa Shogun that, for better or worse, Japan's isolation had ended. Japan's 200-year-old posture as an inter-national recluse was abandoned when Commodore Matthew C. Perry arrived in Uraga harbor in Tokyo Bay on July 8, 1853. Al-though Russians and English had tried to establish trade agreements with Japan, they failed. Rebuffed by the Japanese and refused support by their own governments, their ships withdrew. The Portuguese were expelled from Japan in 1638; from 1641, only a few Dutch merchants were allowed to remain on Deshima Island in Nagasaki Bay.

Pearry was the emissary of a U.S. government determined to force the issue. American whaling boats were the object of ill treatment. The Americans wanted respect for their seamen, a port of call for supplies, and the promise of Japan as a trading partner. When Perry entered Uraga, he not only beat out the Russian expedition ordered by Czar Nicholas II, by one month, he also flaunted four men-of-war and an insistent letter from President Millard Fillmore. He warned the Japanese that he would return to resume negotiations, and he did half a yea later with more ships. On March 31, 1854, Perry signed a treaty with the Japanese that opened the ports of Shimoda and Hakodate in the north to American ships. Japanese treaties with other nations to lowed in quick succession: Britain in 1854; Russia and the Netherlands in 1855.

With his fearsome kurofune - "black ships" - Perry was the first to force Japan to open its ports, and his countryman Townsend Harris was the first foreign consul to make Shimoda Japan's laboratory in international diplomacy. A thoughtful man, the 52-year-old Harris showed his mettle during a year in Shimoda while he waited to meet the shogun in Edo, later Tokyo. "The Complete Journal of Townsend Harris," published in 1930, then in a revised edition in 1959, could serve as a manual for Western diplomats to Japan. Harris's resolute approach and his sense of fair play won the respect of the Japanese. He was not overly patronizing and he had his zeal in check. He knew what he — and the U.S. government -wanted from Japan. He got it, not without some qualms of conscience.

On Sept. 4, 1856, after he hoisted the U.S. flag before his headquarters in the Gyokusenji temple, he wrote in his journal: "Grim reflections — ominous of change — un-doubted beginning of the end. Query — if for the real good of Japan?"

Perhaps Shimoda would admit today that Harris's intrusion was for the common good, but in 1856, the town fathers tried to dissnade him from settling there. When he insisted on his right as granted by the treaty, they did "civilly ask me to go away." But he unloaded his gear and invited Shimoda officials on board his ship to watch the men

"exercise at the guns."

The Japanese installed Harris and his interpreter in the temple and began a series of delaying tactics that presaged future contacts between the two countries.

To any request, Japanese officials ex-plained that "they had to reflect on every new proposition a long time; that they could not decide as quickly as the men of the West." Experienced in living in the Orient, as a trader on his own merchant ship, Harris had completed a U.S. commercial treaty with the king of Siam before arriving in Japan. He knew and loved Asia and considered as he neared Shimoda that this "may be the beginning of a new order of things in

As soon as he was at home in Gyokusenji temple, today a major tourist site, he started to ramble over the hills. He wrote that "a more genial climate than that of Shimoda, so far, is not to be found in the world."

E appreciated the weather, the flowers, the crops and, finally, the peo-ple. He was often exasperated, but he was patient. By November 1857, when he was allowed to go to Edo, he was convinced the Japanese were a "singular people." The journal details his growing affection for them, and theirs for him, but he shows his anger when he writes: "I will cordially meet any real offers of amity, but words will not do. They are the greatest liars on earth." When the Japanese tried to amuse him, he commented: The lubricity of these people passes belief. I was asked a hundred different questions about American females." One of the officials was in charge of providing Harris, a bachelor, with a woman. He said, "if I fancied any woman the Vice-

Governor would procure her for me." David Galloway is a writer and professor the abandoned Okichi, Harris's alleged geissed in Wuppertal, West Germany.

A popular Shimoda legend is the story of the abandoned Okichi, Harris's alleged geissha-turned-concubine. The 16-year-old girl

On the walks of an annex are sentimental paintings of the views, the walks, and the hot of an ill-matched love affair, and under one of Okichi's trip to the consulate is this description: "Since then diplomatic relations between the two countries went smoothly." Harris does not mention Okichi in his jourholds its Black Ships Festival to commemorate Perry's arrival in the painted vessels. It has all the hoopla of an American Fourth of July. American ships, now steel-gray, lie at anchor in the harbor; thousands of sailors in uniform roam the town; American and Japanese dignitaries make speeches and ride in a parade through the city; high school and military marching bands strut their stuff, and elaborate fireworks explode over the harbor at night.

Last month U.S. Ambassador Mike Mansfield rode in an open car with Mayor Kyoshi Iketani of Shimoda, waving to the crowds lining the streets, grasping hands, supposedly gave up her true love, a simple and patting babies on the head. From his car carpenter, to serve the American. Dow Average Skids 16.24 Points

NEW YORK -Stocks finished broadly lower Thursday, with the Dow Jones industrial average closing below the 1,300 benchmark for only the second time since it broke that record May 20.

International Business Machine Corp.'s continuing slide set the mood for the market. Technology issues tumbled and the Dow Jones industrial average dropped 16.24, to 1,290.10.

Declines led advances 1,146 to 481 among the 2,028 issues traded. Volume increased to 107.03 million shares from to 97.7 million Wednesday. Analysts said the market was still reeling from IBM's announcement that its profits would decline in the first nine months of 1985. "The market has been in a little bit of a consolidation phase, but the last two days has been dominated by the weakness in IBM," said

Alfred Harris, of Josephthal & Co. "We think the market will certainly rally up rom here," he said, with the same positive factors - lessening inflation and improvement in price-earnings multiple — still in force-"It's a very ragged market, with little distinct leadership," said Eugene Peroni, of Bateman Eichler, Hill Richards, Los Angeles.

"There is a bit of panic among the institu-tions," he said, sparked by IBM's announce-

Sperry led the actives, falling ½ to 56½. It announced it was in merger talks with Burroughs, which plunged 3½ to to 56¼ on the IBM followed, giving up 2% to 118%.

M-1 Rises $800 Million

NEW YORK — The U.S. basic money supply, known as M-1 and representing funds readily available for spending, rose $800 million in early June, the Federal Reserve Board reported Thursday.

The Fed said M-1 climbed to a seasonally adjusted $585.6 billion in the week ended June 3 from a revised $584.8 billion the previous week. The previous week's figure originally was reported as $584.9 billion. M-1 includes cash in circulation, checking-type accounts at banking institutions and non-bank travelers checks.

The "law of contrary" reason triumphed, belittling dour prophets who, to paraphrase, Oscar Wilde; "know the price of everything and the value of nothing." Since late 1981, approximately 90% of our "buy" recommendations subsequently advanced, with 92% of CGR's, select, "short sales," buckling, among them APPLE, COLE-CO. COMMODORE and TANDY. During the craze for "high-tech," our analysts mused... "Short APPLE $56, COLECO $51, COMMODORE $58, and TANDY $47; the Quartet is not in harmony with reality." Since then the Quartet has soured; APPLE rotted to $18, COLECO collapsed under $10, COMMODORE capsized, sinking to $9, and TANDY toppled to $24. There is no Dusk without Dawn, no death without burth The demise of bloated equities will not abort the DOW vaulting over 2000. The plasticity of achievement will thrust mankind to horizons undreamed of decades ago.

The market is telling us, in the eloquence of the "Tape", that the stabilization of East and West, of confused and chaotic societies, is inevitable; that in this decade,

U.S. Adopts Laser Method In Uranium Enrichment

By ERIC N. BERG

New York Times Service EW YORK - It is billed as the state-of-the-art technology in uranium enrichment, a step that will create jobs, help restore the U.S. government's dominance in uranium sales and possibly reduce energy costs for thousands of households and businesses. However rosy it may sound, that was what the Energy Department was saying last week when it announced that it was abandoning two long-standing techniques for enriching uranium for nuclear power plants and weapons and would concentrate instead on a newer, more efficient, less costly technique.

Although the new approach, called the "atomic vapor laser isotope separation" process, has many problems that must

'Our conclusion is that this is next century.

be overcome and although it would not be used until 1995, department officials are confident that they have chosen the best technology.

"Our conclusion is that this is the way of the next century, said John R. Longenecker, who is the deputy assistant secretary of energy for uranium enrichment. "It's the world's best way of enriching

As it comes out of the ground, uranium ore cannot be used as fuel for nuclear power plants and weapons. The ore contains two isotopes of uranium, but only one of them, uranium 235, can support a nuclear reaction. And U-235 occurs in tiny quantities in ore — less than 1 percent of a given sample. Enrichment, which in the United States is performed only by the government because of the costs and risks involved, raises the U-235 content in uranium ore to about 4 percent.

The current technique for enriching manum was developed during World War II as part of the Manhattan Project. Known as the gaseous-diffusion method, the technique worked on the the gaseous-diritison method, the technique worked on the principle of passing uranium ore in gas form through a filter that would collect the U-235. Although the method worked well, it required a tremendous amount of energy to force the gas through the filters. Another enrichment technique used today, called the gas-centrifuge process, requires far less energy than the first method but is extremely costly because of the large number of huge, high-speed centrifuges that must be purchased.

O THE government has been seeking a cheaper, more efficient way to gather U-235 for enriching uranium, and it thinks it has found such a process with atomic vapor laser isotope separation.

The technique, which was developed a decade ago by scientists at Hughes Aircraft Co. and Exxon Corp. and has since been refined at the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory, starts by vaporizing uranium ore through the application of intense

The vapor is then placed in a "separation chamber," a shooting gallery of sorts, in which it is bombarded with laser beams. They ionize the U-235 in the ore — that is, they give it a negative charge. That causes the U-235 to be attracted to positively charged metal plates inside the separation chamber. Scientists can then draw off the U-235 to enhance other uranium ore.

"You are just separating out the various components, and you've got enriched uranium," Mr. Longenecker said.

The attractiveness of the method is its cost. While an enrichment plant based on centrifuges would require 28 acres (11 hectares), Mr. Longenecker estimates that one based on lasers might occupy only one-fourth that space. The equipment for such a plant, he says, would cost roughly one-third as much as for a centrifuge plant. And although laser complexes require more electricity than centrifuge facilities, the current is still well below the level consumed in the older techniques.

That being the case, the government hopes to save hundreds of millions of dollars annually on the cost of producing nuclear fuel. That could go far, uranium experts say, toward restoring its leadership in the business of selling enriched uranium. Although

April Figures Revised Upward

By John M. Berry Washington Past Service WASHINGTON — Retail sales in the United States fell 0.8 percent in May, but the figures for the previous month were revised upward sharply to show a 2.4-percent gain, the Commerce Department reported Thursday.

The large upward revision for April. primarily the result of a much higher figure for antomobile sales, means that the average level of sales for the two months, $114.2 billion, was 2.2 percent higher than the average for the first quarter of the year.

The May decline left sales 5.3 percent higher than they were in May 1984. The figures are adjusted for seasonal variations and differences in the number of selling days, but not for inflation.

Commerce Secretary Malcolm
Baldrige said the figures indicated that "consumer demands are growing at a healthy pace."

Large increases in disposable incomes, boosted by tax refunds, should stimulate spending in June," he said. Some analysts, however, inter preted the retail sales data much iess bullishly. Among other things, part of the higher consumer demand is being satisfied increasingly with goods produced abroad, adding to the nation's trade deficit rather than to domestic medium. rather than to domestic production and payrolls, analysts said. Sandra Shaber of Chase Econometrics said the erratic month-to-month change was due in part to delayed distribution of income-tax refunds. The end of formal quotas on Japanese auto imports has also affected the figures, she said. The advance report on April sales showed only a 0.9-percent increase over the month before, with anto sales, which account for about 20 percent of total sales, falling 2.7 percent. Those advance figures, as usual, were based on reports from only about 2,500 companies.

With more complete information from a sample of 15,000, the April figure was revised upward.

Dollar Higher In New York

United Press International NEW YORK — The dollar closed higher Thursday when a disappointing May retail sales report was offset by a sharp upward revision in the figures for April.

The dollar was off following a report that retail sales slipped in May, but turned upward again in response to a revision to a 2.4-percent gain in April. The British pound was at $1.2660 in New York, down a notch from $1.2676.

Other New York prices and Wednesday rates included: 3.0930 German Dentsche marks, up from 3.0905; 2.6070 Swiss francs, up from 2.6015; 9.43 French francs, up from 9.4125; 1,968 Italian lire, up from 1,961; and 249,40 Japanese yen, down from 249.78.

NEW YORK — Argentina paid $250 million in overdue interest

Wednesday to its creditor banks around the world, as the United States and other governments pre-pared to lend Buenos Aires about $450 million more.

The payment makes Argentina current on interest payments up to Dec. 30, 1984, and reduces its interest arrears to commercial banks to about $1 billion. The bridge loan by the various governments will allow Argentina to make further pay-

"The payment is another posi-tive step by the government of Ar-gentina," said William R. Rhodes, a Citibank official who leads the committee of banks negotiating with Buenos Aires. He said it would help the banks put into place a long-delayed rescheduling of Argentina's foreign debt. The rescheduling agreement will provide Buenos Aires with $42 billion in fresh loans, which will help it pay

The payment will also improve Argentina's position before an in-teragency committee of American bank regulators that is meeting in Washington. The regulators are re-viewing whether to downgrade Argentine debt, which could require banks to set aside substantial reserves against their loans to Argentina. A lower credit rating for Argentina would also make it more

Two networks, Showtime/The Movie Channel and The Playboy Channel, announced plans last week for pay-per-view opera-tions, and a third company, called The Exchange, is develop-ing a similar offering.

Pay-per-view allows cable sub-scribers to pay a small fee to see a specific movie or other special programming. Subscribers can get pay-per-view instead of, or in addition to, the continuous programming they now receive for a monthly fee from so-called pay-cable networks such as Showtime or Time Inc.'s Home Box

Sperry Opens Merger Talks With Burroughs

By Tim Bovee

DETROIT - Burroughs Corp. and Sperry Corp. said Thursday they were discussing a merger that would create the world's secondlargest computer maker, but analysts were skeptical the multi-bilison-dollar marriage would work.
"It will probably make them more competitive, but it is not certain that one and one is going to make more than two. It may in fact make less than two," said Dave Terrie, senior analyst with The Yankee Group, a Boston-based market research and consulting

Burroughs and Sperry, in a brief announcement, said they were "en-gaged in negotiations with respect to a common stock merger of the two companies." Neither company elaborated on the statement. A transaction merging the two companies could be worth nearly $6 billion, based on the value of the common stock shares of each.

Burroughs stock closed Thursday at $56.25, down $3.125. Sperry traded at $56.25, off 50 cents.

By Robert A. Bennett New York Times Service

NEW YORK — Americans are enjoying the lowest interest rates have seen in five years or e. Mortgage rates are down. Car loan rates are down. The cost of business borrowing has fallen. Even the Treasury Department's borrowing costs have plunged.

The decline has come relatively quickly and spread pretty much across the board. The rates paid on three-month Treasury bills, for instance, are now less than 7 percent more than three percentage points below a year ago and less than half of what they were as recently as 1981.

If the rate relief persists --- and many economists expect stable or lower interest rates for the next few years — it will bolster such basic industries as housing and automobiles, help lower the federal deficit, relieve the punishing pressures on thrift institutions and cut borrow

"In the past few weeks, for the first time," said Edward S. Hyman, economist at Cyrus J. House Panel Approves Interstate Bank Bill

WASHINGTON - American banks could spread across more state lines while getting less compe-tition from outside the industry under legislation approved by the House Banking Committee.

The committee voted Wednesday to replace regional banking compacts with full interstate banking. In five years, only states that bar any interstate banking could avoid opening their borders to all

The panel also approved a bill closing a loophole in the law that has allowed non-banking companies to operate limited-service banks, circumventing rules designed to keep the banking system separate from other industries.

The bill would require divestiture of all so-called non-bank banks created after May 9, 1984. The 109 such operations approved before that date would be allowed to commue, but could not expand. The interstate banking bill, approved 31-to-18, would allow states to band together to exclude outside banks only through July 1, 1990, or for two years after joining such a compact, whichever date is later. After that, a state allowing any out-side banks could no longer ban any bank based on geography.

The vote was a victory for big banks in New York and California, who were losers in a Supreme Court ruling on Monday that sanctioned a pact between Massachu-Southeast and the Northwest.

The Supreme Court's decision was similar to language passed by the Senate last year. As a result, Senator Jake Garn, Republican of Utah and chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, has taken interstate banking "off the table" as his panel works on an omnibus banking bill, a committee source

But Representative Fernand J. St Germain, Democrat of Rhode Island, said a ban on big-bank merg-ers and consumer protections in the House bill would help get the legislation through Congress.

"I don't think you can rule out this bill," he said.

Toyota to Pay A 5-for-100 Stock Dividend

NAGOYA - Toyota Motor Corp. will pay a 5-for-100 stock dividend and hopes to raise its cash dividend to 16 yen (.06 cent) for the year ending June 30, 1985, from 14 yen, Shoichiro Toyoda, the company president, said Thursday.

He said parent company cur-rent profit this year would ex-ceed the estimated 600 billion yen ($2.4 billion), on sales of about 6 trillion yen, higher than the estimated 5.9 trillion.

This compares with the re-cord 521.77-billion current profit on record sales of 5.473 trillion a year earlier. Mr. Toyoda said the unward revision is due to the dollar's strength against the yen and a steep rise in exports to China. The stock dividend will bring the capital to 2.67 billion shares valued at 133.30 billion yen.

DETROIT — Chrysler Corp. plans to shift medium-duty truck production from Mexico City to Monterrey, making room for it to build the Dodge Ramcharger in Mexico instead of the United States.

Jobless Rate is Now A Liability for Kohl

scheduled to go to trial Aug. 29. Analysts said that a key question for the next national elections in February 1987 would be whether hhe government could push unemployment below 2 million, a level reached in 1983 during Mr. Kohl's first full year in office and one viewed as a critical psychological threshold among voters. A recent survey by the Infas re-search institute found that since his party's poor showing in the North Rhine-Westphalia election, Mr. Kohl's popularity has dropped sig-nificantly below that of the Hans-Jochen Vogel, the Social Democrat candidate for chancellor in national elections in March 1983.

During the last week of May, Mr. Wogel pulled ahead of Mr. Kohl by o percentage points, the first time that the opposition has overtaken Mr. Kohl by a margin larger than 5 percentage points, an Infas analyst said. For a head-to-head race, the response was 42 percent for Mr. Vogel, 36 percent for Mr. Kohl and 22 percent undecided.

Such losses of support have left
Mr. Kohl's coalition partners unsettled about their own electoral prospects, particularly in regional elections next year in Lower Saxony and Bavaria. They also are concerned about other negative éco-

Comic factors. For example, West Germany's GNP fell I percent in the first quarter of 1985 from 1984's fourth quarter, although that drop could be partly explained by severe winter weather. That decline has raised some doubts about whether, the economy would be able to grow at the 2.5-percent annual rate predict-

But Otto Schlecht, senior economist in the Economics Ministry acknowledged that after assessing disappointing first-quarter developments, the government has backed off from its earlier projection that average unemployment this year would be lower than the 2.27 million in 1984.

"Average unemployment in 1985 will be as high or possibly higher than last year," Mr. Schlecht said. Mr. Kohl defended his austerity program this week in West German DEWSDADETS.

"A tax cut in one step would not be linancially sound," he said, add-ing that any retreat from stable price and interest-rate policy would only create a short-term ignition" of growth with no lasting

The government also plans to propose legislation to increase spending during next month's cabi-

Despite the proposed spending increase, the Kohl government has said that it would not expand the 25-billion-DM budget deficit pro-jected for 1986. The fear is that any deficit expansion could trigger a loss of business confidence.

Electricity Supply Commission, South Africa Highlights from the Chairman's Review and Financial Statements for the year ended 31 December 1984

The electricity supply industry in South Africa in 1984 was subject to tour major influences: the state of the economy; Escam's financial position; the performance of the electricity supply system; and a proposed new management and control shockure for Escam.

ELECTRICITY SUPPLY AND THE ECONOMY

ELECENCHY SUPPE AND THE SCONDAY

Following new, lower estimates of long-term growth in gross demestic product, Escorn adjusted its copial expension projections downwards from a long-term annual average growth rate of 7% to 6%, and may even go below this depending on future economic constitutions.

For nearly 15 years Escorn has provided flexibility in its power station construction programme, allowing for the determant, or cancellation, of later generating sets if this should become recessory.

This policy was followed in 1984 when a number of such generating sets and other projects were deferred. In present Rand values the determents represent a reduction in capital expenditure of R6 800 million over the next ten years. Total capital expenditure for this period is now estimated of R55 400 million.

FRANCIAL POSTORI Internal financing generated by the Capital Development Fund has declined shouldly since 1990. In 1994 if represented 26,6% of capital expenditure, compared with a high of 42,3% in 1990. The present coverage of capital expenditure by the Capital Development Fund is not regarded as eatisfactory in the long term. Escorn has allowed the coverage to drop temporarity in the hope of obtaining some short-term economic gain for the country, However, in the larger term it will be necessary to increase internal filtrancing to of lears 30% of capital expenditure. Investors will be working the situation carefully and it is doubtful whether the present tower rates of internal financing will be occepted on sound practice.

THE SUPPLY SYSTEM
A mojor ochievement in 1984 was the commissioning of the first generating set of Koeberg, Africa's first ruclear power station. If performed well in 1984 and in its first six months generated 4 OCO million KWn.

wen in 1964 cmg in its tinst six months generated 4 COO million KWn.

IEW MANAGEMENT AND CONTROL STRUCTURE.

The new Electricitly Council as legislated for in 1985 will, like the present Electricity Supply Commission, determine Escant's poticy and objectives and long-term planning, it will also control performance by Escant of its functions, the exactise of its powers and the fulfilment of its distilles. The Management Board will manage Escant's affairs in accordance with the policy and objectives determined by the Electricity Council.

The Management Board will be appointed by the Electricity Council.

PROSPETS

South Africa is going through a difficult phose of adjustment to secure sound economic development. The electricity supply Industry has responded well to the situation by, on the one hand, trying to contain string costs and, on the other hand, adopting a flexible approach in its capital expansion programme. The objective of this response is neither to burden hinner consumers with undust high costs not to prejudice figure economic growth of the Republic by inadequate provisions for electricity demand.

for the time and money of viewers. "it's a hedge against video cas-settes," said Scott Kurnit, executive vice president in charge of Showtime's pay-per-view operations. We can take a real good piece of that revolution and bring it into the cable industry."

Industry analysts agree that the system has potential, but warn that it will not be a panacea. "It's the electronic version of going down to the tape-rental store," said Alan J. Gottesman, an analyst at LF. Rothschild, Unterberg, Towbin. "There will be the same kind of ground swell, if they market and price it right, as there was with HBO in the early days."

Proponents of the plan argue that even though a $4-to-$5 price is a few dollars more than the cost of renting a tape, consumers will be willing to pay it because they will avoid a trip to the tape-rental store, which is often out of the most popular movies.

'novelty factor" of pay-per-view is likely to wear off, just as it has for cable and VCR's. "Look what's nappening to tape rental," he said. People aren't willing to take just any old thing anymore. There isn't that much that's worth paying for."

The industry itself is somewhat divided over the prospects for this ewest programming option.

THE POST-MODERN AURA: The Act of Fiction in an Age of Inflation

By Charles Newman, with a preface by Gerald Graff. 203 pages. Hardcover, Northwestern University Press, Box 1093X, 1735 Benson Avenue, Evanston, 1ll. 60201.

Reviewed by Christopher Lehmann-Haupt

IN THIS dazzling yet penetrating study of contemporary art — by which he unabashedly means almost nothing but contemporary fiction — Charles Newman would seem to have committed the ultimate vulgarity. He has reduced contemporary literature in all its variety to nothing more or less than a consumer commodity in the economic marketplace. And, having done so, he has gone on to argue that like all other current commodities from soup to nuts and bolts, literature has been devalued in the past 40 years.

That's why there are no more literary giants towering over the landscape, he argues. That's why we cannot with any conviction point to any fictional masterpieces from the postwar era. That's why there are no more colossal men (or women) of letters. That's why despite there having been published in the last 30 years more novels "than in any comparable period of history," no age "has been less sure about what a novel is, or more skeptical of the value and function of 'imaginative' literature."

Is Newman - a novelist himself, as well as a critic, a teacher, and the founder and editor of the literary review Tri-Quarterly - merely speaking metaphorically? In certain respects, yes, and the metaphor serves him powerfully. In the marketplace where literature is traded, competing interests make powerful and conflicting demands. Since these demands drive the price of fiction up (and the value down). Newman takes the opportunity to excoriate these competitors, whether they are formalists or realists, avant-gardists or neo-conservatives, neo-realists, structuralists, deconstructionists, Freudians, believers in the anxiety of influence, or criers after a revival of moral fiction.

He is by no means merely playing around with his metaphor. In a chapter called "Opacily as Reality," he asks whether William H. Gass's war against pseudo-art basa't posited "literature as a closed organism, a factory in which curiosity about what is labricated and what is the goal of its labor are apparently questions outside its design." In response to Smi Bellow's competing endorsement of tradi-tion. Newman argues trenchantly that despite "its clear limitations." Gass's formalist like can no longer be countered by a simple appeal to admissible content.

Elsewhere, he delivers an especially cogent critique of perceptual relativism: The literary "enthropement of the perceiver" who says "it all depends on your point of view" is "of course only the most egregious Humanist misreading of Modern physics, which ignores not only the elegant and exeruciating step-by-step methodology which characterizes the true scientific method, but also the horror which always ac-companies the discovery of new evidence which cannot be explained in an old context."

Yet Newman also means it literally when he treats contemporary fiction as a marketplace commodity; or, to put it another way, #25 metaphor is as serious as any description of reality. In the rebellion of Modernism against Tradition, the New unquestionably pitted it-self against entrenched authority, he argues. But in the transition from Modernism to Post-Modernism — a "Second Revolution" that began about the time of World War II — the nature of the competition changed. The strug-gle between the left and the right became lost in the bigger game of oligopoly, or the market condition that exists when there are few enough sellers to fix prices irrespective of sup-ply and demand. The object of the game be-came to buy both guns and butter. The price was rampant inflation, devaluing even the tegrity of serious fiction.

The foregoing summary, of course, is a vast oversimplification of Newman's exquisitely complex argument, whose prose can be daunting enough to beg comparison with Hegel. In elementary version, it may seem to echo every variety of social critic from John Kenneth Galbraith to Herbert Marcuse to William Irwin Thompson. But Newman delivers the goods: His anatomy of the contemporary pubshing scene is as deadly as his evisceration of the deconstructionists.

If "The Post-Modern Aura" has any major failing besides its suffocating verbal density, it is a lack of concrete examples of what the author considers promising in current fiction. But even this lack of illustration has its benefits. Newman is so evocative that the mind is pressured willy-nilly to play with possibilities. One is eventually reminded of a talk that the poet Reed Whittemore gave a few years ago in which he conceived of Yeats's "rough beast" slouching "towards Bethlehem" as the emergence of new and hitherto unimagined literary forms.

In "The Post-Modern Aura," Newman, depite his sometimes inhospitable prose, succeeds in evoking Yeats's "sands of the desert." I had always thought of the rough beast as ugly and threatening. In "The Post-Modern Aura," Newman, as Whittemore did in his talk, makes its arrival an event to be anticipated with something almost like hope and relief.

Chief's Crown, Once Vulnerable, Pulls Away from the Pack to Become Derby Favorite

New York Times Service
LOUISVILLE, Kentucky — Last week, Chief's Crown looked like one of at least half a dozen colts with about equal chances of winning the 111th Kentucky Derby Saturday, and most of the racing world considered him a vulnera-

Now he is the strongest Derby favorite in six years and a legitimate aspirant for a sweep of the Triple Crown.

It took the small, bay-colored colt one minute 47 3/5 seconds to change the Derby picture - his running time in the Blue Grass Stakes on April 25. He had been expected to win the race easily, but not to run in sizzling time or to get stronger with every furlong, running his last splits faster than his early ones.

While the revisionist view of Chief's Crown is probably closer to the truth than the cloud of doubt under which he had raced until the Bine Grass, the Derby is still no walkover. What had looked like the worst crop of 3-year-olds in a decade is beginning to blossom, and Chief's Crown still has a few things to prove. He is bettable at odds of 9 to 5, but not unbeatable.

About the only people who were neither surprised nor impressed by Chief's Crown's Blue Grass were those closest to him, the trainer Roger Laurin and the jockey Donald MacBeth.

His next start proved to be his only defeat in the past 10 months, but it was also the "With his breeding and the way he race that convinced Laurin just how good the colt might be. It was the Futurity at Belmont, and the track was sloppy. Chief's Crown broke sharply but then began dropping back steadily. MacBeth could tell that the colt hated the track.

"Then he began running, picking off those horses one by one like he didn't want to lose." MacBeth said. "It really showed a character."

The colt fell a length short of catching Spectacular Love, but he had been more impressive than ever before, and he has not lost since. He came back to drown a weak Cowdin field by six lengths.

Chief's Crown struggled a bit to win the Norfolk at Santa Anita, but was dead sharp for the Breeder's Cup race, bulling his way through a large field to score over Tank's Prospect and Spead A Buck, two Derby rivals.

He was almost a unanimous selection as the champion 2-year-old, but there which the colt again went to the front, were doubts about how he would fare at 3. He had never run an impressive time stronger, as if he were fitter and improvas the champion 2-year-old, but there 3. He had never run an impressive time and his one race around two turns, the Norfolk, had been his weakest.

There was also the virus in January. A filly in Laurin's barn who caught the Laurin said. "It wasn't a big jump up or away?

Laurin now thinks it may have been a blessing. Chief's Crown got a late start, delaying his debut until the Swale Stakes March 2, but he is coming into the Derby fresher than many of his rivals. Laurin thinks the colt is peaking at just the right

His races this year support that theory. In the Swale, he did not have to work hard to beat a moderate field going seven furlongs. He ran back four weeks later in the Flamingo. He was disqualified and placed second for possible interference in a call so controversial that the decision was reversed 10 days later. Then came the 11/2-mile Blue Grass, in

"It was about what we expected,"

The one thing he has missed this year is real competition or any adversity of any kind. Although all his victories last year were earned from off the pace, this year he has found himself on the lead without a straw in his path every time.

"That's just coincidence," Laurin said. "We never wanted the lead. When they stop running such slow fractions, we'll stop being on the lead. I can't see him being in front all the way Saturday."

That is indeed unlikely with one-dimensional front-runners such as Eternal Prince and Spend A Buck in the race. Chief's Crown figures to be slightly off their pace and then to make his move on

People talk about how horses could win by more if they were pressed, or how they do just barely enough to win. I don't buy the idea of horses figuring out the minimum they have to do to win and then doing Veitch gets an argument on that score from Eddie Sweat, Chief's Crown's groom. Sweat knows a little about what it takes to win a Derby, having been the groom for Riva Ridge and Secretariat, who won the Derby in 1972 and 1973 while working for the trainer Lucien Laurin, Roger's father.

"This colt is no Secretariat." Sweat which the cort again went to the front, and instead of drifting and tiring he got stronger, as if he were fitter and improving. The time of 1:47 3/5 was only one-fifth off the track record.

Bird, who stung Detroit for 42 points in Game 2, did not make a field goal in the final period. His only points in the period came on a pair of free throws with 1:21 left the Celtics' last points.

Tyler, a 6-foot-7 reserve forward, made the Pistons' last eight baskets after scoring just two points in the first half and none in the third. Center Bill Laimbeer led Detroit with 27 points while guard Isiah Thomas scored 26 and guard John Long 20. Dennis Johnson led Boston with 27, including 15 in the third quarter. Bird had 25 and Kevin McHale 24.

Detroit doubled up on the ball when possible with fresh players to try to contain Bird. Tyler and Kelly Tripucka did a good job of fronting the Celtics' forward, keeping the ball from his hands.

Tulane Pulls Out of Sports Conference

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Tulane University withdrew from the Metro Conference on Thursday, bowing to the wishes of a league that did not want a member without a basketball program. Tulane's president, Eamon Kelly, canceled Tulane's basketball program after allegations of point shaving and NCAA violations. At the same time, he said he would ask the Metro to waive its rule requiring members to play men's basketball. The Metro Conference voted. 7-0, last week to ask Tulane to drop out rather than fight expulsion.

"Madonna and Her Clones" was the headline that caught my eye in the newspaper of record and the sentences that exhausted my dwindling supply of patience said: She uses only one name, but no

Speaking of waxing and waning heat, I haven't seen anything in The Times lately about Prince or Michael Jackson. What is the state of their heat? It is not easy to keep abreast of the rock-star news when the newspaper of record deals with it only sporadically, but I try heaven knows, I try.

It seems scarcely a year ago that the hottest of all possible stars was Michael Jackson, but while still digesting that fact I was astonished to discover that tremendous heat was suddenly being exuded by Prince, a male rock star whose wardrobe includes an ankle-length blanket of purple sequins.

"What is this!" I exclaimed. "Michael Jackson has lost his heat, and the heat is now with Prince?"

I was reminded of the first book of Kings, which tells us that after King David became "old and stricken in years" the doctors tried was mute, as it has been on Prince's thermal condition lately.
